

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

Some quite intense showers are already developing and these may cause some issues this afternoon, although on this occasion there will be places which escape the heavier downpours. However, where they do occur, we could see 15 mm or more in an hour, with a few places seeing 30 to 50 mm through the afternoon and evening.

Amounts in the Scottish part of the warning area will probably be somewhat less, but on the other hand, some of the showers in Scotland will last into the night.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 14:00 on Sat, 09th Jun 2012 until 22:00 on Sat, 09th Jun 2012

Heavy showers will continue to develop through the afternoon, with thunderstorms in places.

The public should be aware that these will lead to a lot of surface water on some roads and localised flooding may occur.
